THE FIRST PEOPLE'S COMMISSARY OF HEALTH OF THE SOVIET STATE

Nikolay Alexandrovich Semashko (1874–1949) not only made an enormous contribution to the development of Soviet medicine, but world healthcare as well. Semashko was the first People's Commissar of Health of the Russian Soviet Federative Socialist Republic. He headed the People's Commissariat of Health for 11 years during some of the most difficult years for the country and was involved in the development of anti-epidemic programmes. Under his leadership, prevention treatment, medical examinations, and the health resort business began to develop intensively, and the system of higher medical education was transformed. Many countries adopted some of the best practices of Semashko's system as a cornerstone for their own health systems. It became the prototype of the Beveridge model that was built in the United Kingdom, Finland, Portugal, Australia, Spain, Singapore, Italy, Sweden, Canada, and other countries. Serbia uses a combination of the Semashko model and Germany's Bismarck model. The Soviet system continues to operate in Cuba.
